What's a Direct Support Professional (DSP)?

Direct Support Professionals (DSPs) help people with intellectual and developmental disability live more independently and stay active in their communities. They assist with daily tasks, personal care, and social activities while offering guidance and support. Their role is vital in improving quality of life and encouraging independence.

A DSP should not be confused with a Homemaker and Companion Worker (HHA), Personal Care Assistant (PCA), Certified Nursing Assistant (CNA), or Licensed Practical Nurse (LPN). The responsibility of a DSP is to provide care and support to individuals with developmental disability.

Your First Step to a Fulfilling Career

Did you know that many healthcare and human services professionals began as DSPs? This role provides hands-on experience, industry exposure, and growth opportunities—an excellent career start.
